Resources

Foundation for People with Learning Disabilities

Teachers and education professionals will be able to find out more about the issues affecting young people with learning disabilities and their transition to adulthood using this range of targeted new online resources launched today.

The publication of these resources is the result of two years of workshops and development programmes involving young people with learning disabilities. These include the recent, highly successful Learning 4 Leadership at Transition programme series at colleges in the London boroughs of Hackney and Lambeth, which were designed to help young people with learning disabilities realise and develop their leadership skills.

Jill Davies, Research Programme Manager at the Foundation for People with Learning Disabilities commented:

"Young people with learning disabilities have very complex needs and face unique challenges during their transition to adulthood. Our research has shown there is a real need for targeted information and guidance to help teachers and education professionals ensure they are addressing those needs.

"This new range of resources has been developed through work with educational institutions and students with learning disabilities to ensure that they are practical and based on real experiences.

"All teachers we have met want to help their students reach their maximum potential, and share our view that students with learning disabilities shouldn't be left out of this ambition. We hope that these new resources will prove a real asset in helping them achieve this aim". The online teaching resources will include information on the following issues:

Inclusion in mainstream education <http://tinyurl.com/3ewkaxb>

Emotional wellbeing and mental health <http://tinyurl.com/3d4gbvc>

Transition to adulthood <http://tinyurl.com/3cdrrua>

Each section will include general information on the projects exploring these issues, as well as further recommendations and related publications. <http://tinyurl.com/3rkug4m>

Free Trial Sessions at Rhythm Time*

Rhythm Time offers music classes for pre-school children from 0 - 5 years. Although not trained to teach children with additional needs, they teach music to all pre-school children in a sensitive and responsive manner. Every child gets hands-on experience with a wide variety of instruments, plus the use of sensory equipment and there is a lot of vocal work, plus dance and movement. The toddler session, aimed at children 14 months - 3 years old is supported with a CD which is given to the children to take home, encouraging them to sing along to the tunes, helping with vocabulary and practising the exercises and activities in the comfort of their own home. Rhythm Time would like to invite you to a free trial session at their classes. They run classes throughout Cheshire and North Staffs and encourage you to visit their website at www.rhythmtime.net to find a class locally to you, or alternatively call Frances on 01270 884583 to discuss how the classes may help your child and how to book a free session. If there is sufficient interest they would be happy to set up a class specifically for children with Down's syndrome, or you can join in regular classes.
