SparkleBox is a great website for resources but it has been banned by some local authorities—here's some news from the DSA:

The owner of SparkleBox was imprisoned- is still IN prison. As a consequence - LAs banned the use of SparkleBox in schools although teachers were allowed of course to access it from their homes if they wished. However SparkleBox has now been bought by a new owner and therefore LAs are now allowing it to be accessed in school- Oxfordshire has given their OK. Even if a LA still bans it - which they shouldn't now it is under new ownership -people can still access it from home.

The Inclusion of children with Down's syndrome—Expectations of Behaviour

By considering the learning profile of a child with Down syndrome and looking at areas of need this course will aim to understand and address areas where difficult behaviours may develop. It will look at expectations, appropriate behaviour, including self help skills and go on to outline strategies to encourage good behaviour.

What time is it? Teaching children with Down syndrome and other learning disabilities how to tell the time 9.30—3pm February 2011 to be confirmend

Learning to tell the time is a challenge for many children. The first step for all children is to have a feel for the passage of time, then later be able to tell the time and apply it to everyday life. Time is a very abstract concept and as such can present a major challenge to children with learning difficulties and disabilities. This workshop will equip participants with a structured programme of activities on how to teach the passage of time and then how, step by step, to teach a child how to tell the time. The full day workshop will include the use of a pack of resources and structured activities. This will be available to buy on the day for an additional cost of £5 for the CD of resources and £5 for the structured learning programme.

To express interest, please contact Bernadette:

Carers UK has welcomed new rights to protect carers from discrimination.

On October 1 2010, millions of people caring unpaid for disabled people gained new rights under the Equality Act 2010 which will mean that they cannot be directly discriminated against or harassed because they are caring for someone who is disabled.

Imelda Redmond CBE, Chief Executive of Carers UK, said, "We often hear of situations where carers have been treated less favourably by employers, overlooked for promotion, or not allowed the flexibility they are legally entitled to in work. Around 3 million people currently juggle work with care and these rights could make a big difference. The employers that we work with through Employers for Carers are already supporting carers better in the workplace and have found real business benefits as a result - saving both money and keeping valuable staff - as well as improving carers' lives. She added, "Carers UK has fought for and won many rights for carers over the years, but this is a significant step forward that many carers have been waiting for. The new rights also protect carers where they are provided with a worse service than someone who isn't caring for a disabled person. It also includes protection where carers are discouraged or prevented from using a service because they are caring for a disabled person. Carers UK will be focussing on the Equality Act 2010 and carers new rights for Carers Rights Day 2010 on Friday 3 December. Organisations wanting to sign up to Carers Rights Day should go to:

Notes:

1. A briefing on the Equality Act 2010 is available from www.carersuk.org.
2. The public sector duties to promote equality come into force in April 2011.
3. The rights gained by the Equality Act in 2010 are based on a landmark case taken by Carers UK member, Sharon Coleman, who cares for her son who has a serious health condition.
4. Carers UK runs Carers Rights Day every year. This years theme is Know Your Rights and part of it will focus on carers new rights under the Equality Act 2010.

Sleep apnoea masquerading as dementia by Adult Down Syndrome Clinic

We have mentioned in our books as well as on posts on this Facebook page that sleep apnoea can cause many health problems. One of them is causing a person to have cognitive skill loss. This can appear to be a non-reversible dementia (such as Alzheimer Disease). We have evaluated and treated many patients with Down syndrome for sleep apnea who presented with a loss of skills. This is also being found in people without Down syndrome. The link below is to an interesting article in the New York Times.

Auditory Memory Exercises

One of the difficulties our children have is remembering words that are spoken long enough to process what is said. A common problem with young children is that they forget the first word in the sentence by the time you get to the last word. To improve on this situation, the auditory memory needs to be strengthened. The auditory memory helps us to "hold on" to words as they are spoken so that we can make sense out of what is said. Here are a couple examples of activities to use with young children to work on this skill. Use these ideas as a spring board and make up your own activities.

Activity 1: What's in the Box?

Materials Needed: A bag or box and a variety of objects.

Procedure: Start by showing your child two objects your child can label and identify them clearly. Put the two objects in the box in your child's view. Ask "what's in the box?" Wait a couple of seconds (literally, about 3) and then identify what you put in the box as you pull the items out. Your child should be able to name both items easily once familiar with the game. Be animated, playful and full of praise. When the game is understood and your child is successful with what's expected, play the game in the same way, but this time do not show the child the items going into the box. Instead, hide them and say "I am putting something into the box. Ready? It's a CAR and a BRUSH. What's in the box?" Only wait a few seconds and then show him. If he gets one, pause for only a few seconds and then give him the name of the other item. Keep playing with different combinations of objects until he is successful most of the time. This is hard work, so keep it fun and keep the pressure off. When he is getting both right 80% of the time, you can increase to three objects.

Activity 2: Laundromat

Materials Needed: Small items of clothing and a basket

Procedure: Make a washing machine out of a box or get a small basket that you label a 'laundry basket.' Lay the clothes out on the table saying and signing each one as you go. Only put out a few at a time. Say "my turn first" and "I'm going to put clothes in the washing machine. I'm going to put in the hat and socks." Then pick up the hat and socks and put them into the machine. Then say "your turn" and tell them that you are going to tell them what to put in the machine. "OK, ready? Socks...shirt". Wait three seconds and if there is no movement, repeat and you can physically prompt her/ him to put the item in the machine. Give plenty of praise. Keep practicing until successful and then increase the number of objects. Keep the session short because this is demanding work; 3 or 4 trials will probably be enough in one go.

Also explicitly teach how to remember items. Just as we remember phone numbers that are called out by saying the number over and over to ourselves until we get to a phone, I teach children how to do this kind of rehearsal. It is a very successful technique that we all use when we want to remember things. When I am doing the above activities with children I will take my turn and say the list of items I need to get (e.g., "sock....shirt....hat") and then I will repeat the list out loud as if to myself a few times before picking those items up. Basically, I am making the memory process observable by saying out loud what I would normally do in my head. © Ann Wheeler, DSC 2010
